To My Patients Who Have Children/Family with Autism, ADHD and other Developmental Challenges

Subject: 2019 Autism & ADHD Awareness Day Event at Oakville Naturopathic Wellness Centre

I'm contacting you today to bring your attention to our 2019 education day aimed at helping children with neurodevelopmental challenges, such as autism or ADHD. This is the third year that ONWC has hosted an event to assist families on their journeys to help their children. The day is also open to Therapists and Teachers who may be interested in learning about naturopathic and biomedical approaches to treating these conditions.

A flyer is enclosed with this note, providing more detail about the day. You should also check the Centre's website (www.onwc.ca) for updates on last minute details.

The focus of this year's program is The Environment: How Intoxicants Affect Your Brain. This invisible menace is poorly understood by many, and our speakers believe it's very important to learn how to protect yourselves and your children. Jeff McArthur of Pure Air Experts is our featured guest. Jeff recovered from health problems that were caused by "polluting" of the air, food and water. He started Pure Air Experts because of learning it's easier to prevent exposure than to recover from it. Other sessions will review the science of environmental medicine, including how diet can be both a source of contamination but also help protect you.

The day will also introduce attendees to unique therapies that have helped past patients: NAET (Nambudripad's Allergy Elimination Techniques), Osteopathic Manual Therapy (aka Osteopathy), and unique "tricks" for getting difficult (yucky) supplements into your children.

Here's a summary of the key details:

Date: Saturday, April 27, 2019
